Planned Parenthood Advocates of Arizona Fights Back Against Dangerous Political Attacks on Health Care with Town Halls on Thursday

One of more than 300 events happening across the country during recess week

Phoenix, AZ - Tomorrow as part of an unprecedented increase in nationwide grassroots activism, Planned Parenthood supporters in Arizona will hold town halls inviting Senator Jeff Flake and other elected officials to join in hearing directly from their constituents about the Affordable Care Act and Planned Parenthood. The Affordable Care Act is the single most consequential piece of policy being discussed this session and affects the lives and wellbeing of 700,000 Arizonans. Planned Parenthood Arizona provides vital care for more than 33,000 patients throughout the state. Arizona's Senators Jeff Flake and John McCain have avoided the public and have not scheduled any events to hear from the constituents they are elected to represent and serve.

Throughout this week, Planned Parenthood supporters around the country are showing up in full force at their elected officials' offices and at rallies to fight back against political attacks on reproductive health care. Across the country, and in Arizona, people do not want to see their reproductive rights under threat.

When politicians say they want to defund Planned Parenthood, what they're really saying is they want to block millions across the country and thousands of people in Arizona from access to basic health care -- cancer screenings, birth control, well woman exams -- that they depend on. Planned Parenthood supporters are rallying and organizing to make sure this does not happen.
